Subject: On your 3rd Report

Dear the Correspondence,

Your 3rd report seems good in extending the seats in Legislation Council. However, this does not mean an effective reflection on opinions from public and quality of consultancy on government policy making. Those should be based on an effective collection of public opinions. Perhaps, government should establish an independence reach bureau which collect primary data from public periodically. Its questionnaire should be much relating to policy instead of how much percent of support on a party. Important is that all parties in Legislation Council will be based on an agreed set of primary data for discussing government policies. In order to do so, that independent bureau must be accepted by all parties in Legislation Council.

It seems odd that Democratic Party claimed a majority opinion but NPC got the other set of data on majority. What is the truth? If truth is coming out from fact, government must ensure the collection of data from fact.

Concerning Democracy, it seems that some people in Hong Kong is taking their religious point of view to look at democracy. They take democracy as a religion instead of politic. Perhaps, they don't mean for a Constitutional Reform but demand some kind of framework to let their talent flourish.

Regards,
