One of Hong Kong's great strengths is its financial services sector.

The representation of this sector allowed by the two qualifications given is very restrictive. It disenfranchises a great many of the participants in the industry. As the government seeks to define its approach to regulation of the industry through the Securities and Futures Commission, it would be a good idea to involve those affected by this process in the legislative debate.

I submit that the voting qualification for the financial services sector should be widened. In particular, the idea should be considered of extending the franchise to all corporate bodies and individuals resident in Hong Kong who are licensed by the Securities and Futures Commission as practitioners in the financial services industry.

Yours faithfully,
Charles Targett
